

Landscaping As A Form Of Art

To be a quality landscaper you must be able to create an area that is visually appealing to the senses, and to visitors who view your work. Different forms of landscaping are most often classified by the personal preferences of those doing the work.

Many people these days may recognize two different types that are pretty general in their terminology and they are formal and informal landscaping.

Formal Landscape Designs

Landscapers who work with formal landscape arrangements always take the time to make sure that the designs flow well with each other. All the plants and shrubs complement the ones that they are put with and everything just looks nice and tidy.

Landscapers will often use geometric patterns in their formal landscaping designs. Using low hedges and rock walls to separate the flower beds, they create a sense of definition and order to and other wise unorganized landscape that is very appealing to the beholder.

Professional landscapers will often use water features along with wooden bridges or stone paths in their formal designs. To really give the landscape a sense of elegance many landscapers will use stone. It is a really nice touch. Because of the water features and wooden structures formal garden landscaping is most often used in larger applications.

Landscaping In The Not So Formal Manner

The art of informal landscaping is actually not as easy as you might think. Although, informal landscaping features a jumble of plants and landscape structures, there is a certain order in the jumble.

A good professional landscape designer will have to know what the property owners are after in their informal design and more or less guide the garden to the way they want it to be over a course of time. Kinda like natural growth with a designers touch.

By letting the plants in your informal garden grow in a natural way, without pruning them to death, the landscaper lets nature do some designing of its own. It may not look as neat as formal landscaping but it has it's own sense of style and beauty that only nature can create.

Landscaping can be a very interesting project for those who wish to do it themselves. The actual process of planning the area to be landscaped as well as making the design which you will base on the basic lay of the land is a worthy project that a homeowner can tackle. Not only will you have fun planning your garden or your yard but you will also enjoy maintaining your garden after the entire landscaping project has been finished.

About the Author

There isn't anything as fresh as a fresh and wonderful newly landscaped yard. For some of the dynamite Backyard Landscaping Ideas check out this website. You will not be disappointed. Free Backyard Landscaping Ideas.com

Source: <http://www.article-idea.com>